A Social Sensation in Washington.

The latest social sensation, says the Washington correspondent of the Boston Herald, is that caused by the arrest of a young man named St. Clair, otherwise known as "Sis" Sinclair. This young man found great enjoyment in attending the numerous fashionable balls, parties, and receptions given here during the present winter, attired in the clothing of a fashionable belle of the season. His "get up" was somewhat remarkable, and, strange to say, he played his difficult part part so well that he was not discovered until Wednesday evening last, while in attendance at the soiree given by the Minnesota State Association at Masonic Temple. There he attended, and after much attention, being as it were, one of the leading belles of the evening. He was arrested soon after leaving the Temple. He claims to be but fifteen years old, but his father says he is twenty. He wore dress of the latest fashion, and he wore four button white kid gloves. His hair ornamentations were procured at the same place where other belles procure them, and were decidedly tasteful. He managed his train with elegance and ease. He has a very feminine appearance, and as a lady, would be called very good looking. In the pocket of the dress was found a note signed by a Southern and somewhat obscure member of Congress, who has failed to be re-elected, requesting the doorkeeper of the House galleries "to admit the bearer at all times to the ladies' gallery," besides three letters, which he, as "Miss Sinclair," had received from certain male admirers and a female friend. The case was "fixed" at the Police Court, and no prosecution followed, though there were a great many curious pranks the day yesterday morning who wanted to see the young fellow.

Pay of New York Bank Officials.

The cashier of a New York bank, says a correspondent, receives from $5,000 to $8,000, but the office of the president is often considered honorary. This is but another term to express the facility for filling one's purse furnished by such a gratuitous berth. Any bank president who improves his opportunity may make the office worth $10,000 a year. The paying teller receives from $2,500 to $4,000. It is useless to place him lower than this, because he will steal enough to make up the difference. The receiving teller should receive the same pay for a similar reason. Some of these receiving tellers are out on their salary by serving at the ticket offices of our theaters. As they are good judges of money, and at such places counterfeit currency is offered, their services are of value. A North river grocer, who dealt at a certain bank and knew the receiving teller intimately, once went to the theatre and was astonished to see his friend stationed in the ticket office. He then learned that for two years the man had gone from the bank to the theatre and spent an hour in this service before going home. The fee for that hour paid his house rent. Bookkeepers receive $1,500, which is no more than enough to support a bachelor. No man can think of setting up his household goods on such a pittance and there is a continued rush to obtain bank appointments. Every director has his list of applicants and for every prospective vacancy there are a hundred candidates. In London superannuated clerks are pensioned. This should also be the rule in New York city, but, on the contrary, a worn out clerk is turned away to take his chance. The only exception that I have ever known was that of the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company. When their treasurer, Isaac N. Seymour, retired, after a term of service which lasted more than thirty years of a century, an annuity of $2,000 was granted him and was continued until his death.

Lost His Ox.

When the Grand Trunk railway of Canada was completed, in 1869, many of the farmers had never heard of, much less seen, a railway, but it soon got reported around that passengers could travel by it, and even cattle. A backwoodsman who was indebted to a country merchant was pushed by the latter for payment of the amount due, and the only means of liquidating the debt was by taking a fat ox to the Quebec market. For this purpose he tied his ox to the back of his cart, and drove to the railway station, a distance of nine miles. On surveying the train and seeing an iron railing around the platform of the hind car, he concluded that was the place to tie his ox, which he accordingly did, taking a place in a second-class car himself forward. Presently the train began to move off slowly. The speed increased; quicker and quicker it went. The poor man got very blue, the speed still increasing, until large drops of sweat became visible on his brow. By this time the conductor had reached his car to collect the tickets. Nearly out of breath, the man ran to him, exclaiming: "My dear conductor, my ox will never be able to keep up to this pace; it is not possible."

"Your ox! Keep up to this pace! What do you mean? I don't understand you. Have you oxen on board?"

"Not on board, of course. I tied him to the railing of the hind car."

"You tied your ox to the railing of the hind car? Who told you to do so?"

"No one; but that is the way we always do in the country."

Of course the conductor could not stop his train before reaching the next station, he, needless to say, on looking for the ox, they found attached to the rope a pair of horses, with a small portion of the neck.

The humane conductor made a collection among the passengers on the spot, realizing a larger amount than the ox would have brought at market, which he presented to the distressed farmer, who immediately returned home, vowing he would never have been taken to market by railway again. He has kept his word, and to this day he backs his ox to market behind his own cart.

It is a fact not generally known to students of the history of Massachusetts that as recently as 1750 a woman was burned at the stake at Charlestown, in the commonwealth, "on the northern side of the Cambridge road about a quarter of a mile above the peninsula."

The woman was a colored servant of Capt. John Codman, and was burned for poisoning her master.

A polished stone tomahawk was recently found by a Canadian wood cutter buried in the wood of an oak tree. It is supposed to have been accepted left sticking in a sapling about 120 years ago, the wood closing in around it in the course of time.
